

MyGurukul

SACRED WISDOM — SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 2026

SACRED TEXT

*kuṭrāpi khedaḥ kāyasya jihvā kuṭrāpi khidyate |
manaḥ kuṭrāpi tattyaktvā puruṣārthe sthitaḥ sukham | | 13 | 2 | |
kṛtaṁ kimapi naiva syāditi saṁcintya tattvataḥ |
yadā yatkartumāyāti tatkr̥tvā+a+ase yathāsukham | | 13 | 3 | |
karmanaiṣkarmyanirbandhabhāvā dehasṭhayoginaḥ |
saṁyogāyogavirahādahamāse yathāsukham | | 13 | 4 | |*

— Aṣṭāvakraḡītā, Prakaraṇa 13 (Chapter 13), Verses 2-4

GURU'S INTERPRETATION

The body may experience discomfort, the tongue may crave or complain, the mind may wander and worry, yet you, the true Self, can remain untouched by these fleeting experiences. By recognizing that these are merely sensations arising and passing within the field of consciousness, you detach from their power to disturb your inner peace. This isn't about suppressing these experiences, but rather observing them without clinging or resistance.

The next verse encourages a radical acceptance of the present moment. Contemplate the idea that, in essence, nothing truly needs to be done. This isn't an invitation to laziness, but a call to release the anxiety and pressure of constant striving. When an action naturally arises, perform it with your full attention and then release any attachment to the outcome. Embrace the ease of simply being, allowing life to unfold without your forceful manipulation. The key is to act when moved, not to be driven by restless ambition or fear.

The final verse speaks of the yogi who dwells within the body, yet is free from the bondage of action and inaction. This doesn't mean abandoning all activity, but rather transcending the compulsive need to control and define yourself through what you do or don't do. By remaining unattached to both union and separation, to gain and loss, you abide in your true nature, effortlessly content. This is a state of profound freedom, where you are neither defined nor limited by external circumstances. In modern life, this translates to performing your duties without being enslaved by them, enjoying relationships without clinging, and navigating challenges without losing your inner equilibrium. This passage invites you to cultivate a sense of detachment, not from life itself, but from the illusion that your happiness depends on external factors.

REFLECTION FOR TODAY

Can you identify one area in your life where you are overly attached to the outcome, and how might you release that grip to find greater peace?