— Aṣṭāvakraḡītā, Prakaraṇa 20 (Chapter 20), Verses 4-6

GURU'S INTERPRETATION

He asks, where are past actions bearing fruit, where is liberation while living, and where is the final liberation after death, for one who is always without distinctions? These concepts only hold weight within the realm of illusion, the perceived world of separation. For the Self, eternally undifferentiated, they simply do not exist. He's not denying relative reality, but pointing to something beyond its grasp.

Then, Ashtavakra questions the very idea of an actor, an enjoyer, or even a subtle vibration of consciousness. Where are these for me, he asks, who am always without inherent nature? He dissolves the egoic structure, the 'I' that identifies with action, experience, and even subtle perceptions. You are not the doer, nor the receiver, but the pure awareness that witnesses the play of life. The self-image crumbles, revealing the boundless space of your true being.

Finally, Ashtavakra sweeps away all remaining categories: where is the world, where is the seeker of liberation, where is the yogi, the knowledgeable one? Where is the bound one, and where is the liberated one, in my own form, which is non-dual? He eliminates all distinctions, all labels, all roles. The entire framework of spiritual striving is dismantled, not to discourage effort, but to reveal that the goal is already present, already you. You are already free, already whole, already the non-dual reality. This liberation isn't something to be attained in the future; it is the recognition of your inherent nature in this very moment. In modern life, you can apply this wisdom by questioning your identification with roles, achievements, and even your own thoughts and feelings. Are you truly these things, or are you the spacious awareness that holds them all?

REFLECTION FOR TODAY

If all labels and roles were stripped away, what essential quality would remain that defines you?
