

MyGurukul

SACRED WISDOM — SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 2026

SACRED TEXT

druhyuṃ cānuṃ ca pūruṃ ca yayāter nṛpasattamāt | BRP146.007.1

devayānyāḥ sutau brahman sadṛśau śukrarūpataḥ || 7 || BRP146.007.2

— Brahmapurāṇa, Chapter 146: Story of Yayāti (Chapter 146), Verse 1

GURU'S INTERPRETATION

This verse from the Brahmapurāṇa, within the story of Yayāti, speaks of the sons born to Yayāti through Devayāni: Druhyu, Anu, and Pūru. It highlights that these sons were comparable to Śukra, their maternal grandfather, both in appearance and essence. To understand this, you must appreciate the larger narrative. Yayāti, a righteous king, found himself bound by a curse that prematurely aged him. He sought to exchange his old age for the youth of one of his sons, a request only Pūru ultimately fulfilled.

The names themselves hold spiritual significance. Druhyu represents steadfastness, Anu signifies the subtle or atomic, and Pūru embodies fullness or completion. That they were similar to Śukra, the guru of the demons, suggests a potent lineage imbued with both worldly wisdom and a connection to the divine. The comparison isn't necessarily negative; Śukra, despite his association, possessed deep knowledge and power. His qualities manifest in Yayāti's sons, indicating a complex inheritance.

In your own life, consider the inheritance you carry, both physical and spiritual. Your lineage shapes you, imparting strengths and weaknesses. Like Yayāti's sons, you embody aspects of those who came before, whether you consciously acknowledge it or not. Recognizing this inheritance allows you to understand your own tendencies, patterns, and potential. The verse reminds you that even within seemingly opposing forces, like the divine and the worldly, there can be a confluence of qualities. The challenge lies in discerning which aspects to cultivate and which to transcend, striving towards the "fullness" represented by Pūru, a life lived with purpose and righteousness despite the inherent complexities. This is not about rejecting your past, but about understanding it to shape a better future.

REFLECTION FOR TODAY

How can you acknowledge and integrate the diverse aspects of your lineage to cultivate your highest potential, transforming inherited challenges into opportunities for growth?