SACRED TEXT

satyadharmamayaḥ śrīmān kramavikramasatkṛtaḥ | BRP213.035.1
prāyaścittanakho ghoraḥ paśujānur mukhākṛtiḥ || 35 || BRP213.035.2

— Brahmapurāṇa, Chapter 213: Manifestations of Viṣṇu (Chapter 213), Verse 1

GURU'S INTERPRETATION

This verse from the Brahmapurāṇa paints a vivid, albeit cryptic, picture of one of Viṣṇu's manifestations. It speaks of a form that embodies truth (satya) and righteousness (dharma), a being of auspiciousness (śrīmān) whose greatness is established through measured strides and valiant deeds (kramavikramasatkṛtaḥ). This hints at the power of deliberate action, taken with integrity, to create positive change in the world.

The second line delves into more challenging imagery. "Prāyaścittanakho ghoraḥ" suggests fearsome claws that serve as atonement. This implies that even within the divine, there exists a mechanism for dealing with negativity and karmic debt. The manifestation is further described as "paśujānur mukhākṛtiḥ," having animalistic knees and a face-like form. This blending of human and animal features reminds you of the inherent connection between the divine and the natural world, and the importance of respecting all forms of life. It also acknowledges the raw, instinctual aspects that reside within us all, which, when channeled correctly, can be a source of strength.

How can this ancient wisdom apply to your modern life? Consider the importance of living a life rooted in truth and dharma. Each step you take, each action you perform, should be guided by integrity and a commitment to what is right. Recognize that even mistakes and shortcomings can be opportunities for atonement and growth. Like Viṣṇu's manifestation, embrace the totality of your being, including the aspects that may seem untamed or primal. Learn to harness these energies for good, using them to overcome obstacles and protect what is sacred. The path of righteousness is not always easy, but it is through this journey that you can manifest your own inner divinity and contribute to a more harmonious world. Strive for balance, recognizing that inner strength, compassion, and mindful action are all vital aspects of your spiritual journey.

REFLECTION FOR TODAY

How can you better integrate truth and righteous action into your daily life, transforming challenges into opportunities for growth and atonement?
