

MyGurukul

SACRED WISDOM — SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 2026

SACRED TEXT

anyāṁś ca te tadā dūtāḥ pāpakarmaratān narān | BRP215.072.1
nivedayanti viprendrā yamāya bhṛśaduḥkhitān || 72 || BRP215.072.2
eṣa deva tavādeśād asmābhir mohito bhṛśam | BRP215.073.1
ānīto dharmavimukhaḥ sadā pāparataḥ paraḥ || 73 || BRP215.073.2

— Brahmapurāṇa, Chapter 215: Punishment of the wicked in Yama's world; description of hells (Chapter 215), Verse 1

GURU'S INTERPRETATION

Yama's messengers, the dūtas, bring before him those deeply entrenched in sinful deeds, their hearts heavy with sorrow. These are individuals who, as the text clarifies, have strayed from the path of dharma, forever indulging in wrongdoing. They are presented to Yama with the pronouncement that they have been thoroughly deluded and led astray, acting contrary to divine law and perpetually immersed in sin.

This passage serves as a potent reminder that our choices have repercussions, extending beyond our earthly existence. The "delusion" spoken of highlights the power of ignorance and the allure of temporary gratification, leading us away from our true purpose and ultimately binding us to suffering. It's a warning against succumbing to temptations that promise fleeting pleasure but deliver lasting pain. Dharma, in contrast, represents the righteous path, the adherence to cosmic order and moral principles that leads to inner peace and liberation.

In our modern lives, this ancient wisdom remains deeply relevant. We are constantly bombarded with temptations and distractions, vying for our attention and threatening to pull us away from our own dharma. The pursuit of material wealth, the allure of instant gratification through technology, and the prevalence of unethical practices in various sectors can easily lead us astray. To navigate this complex landscape, we must cultivate self-awareness, discernment, and a strong moral compass. By consciously choosing actions aligned with dharma, we can avoid the sorrowful fate described in the Brahmapurāṇa and cultivate a life of purpose, meaning, and lasting joy. Remember, every action, every thought, contributes to the tapestry of your destiny. The Brahmapurāṇa urges you to reflect upon your choices and strive to live in accordance with dharma, ensuring a brighter and more fulfilling future.

REFLECTION FOR TODAY

Are you allowing fleeting desires to overshadow your commitment to dharma, and what small change can you make today to realign yourself with your true purpose?