

MyGurukul

SACRED WISDOM — SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 2026

SACRED TEXT

tatprāptihetur jñānaṃ ca karma cokaṃ dvijottamāḥ | BRP234.058.1

āgamotthaṃ vivekāc ca dvidhā jñānaṃ tathocyate || 58 || BRP234.058.2

śabdabrahmāgamamayaṃ paraṃ brahma vivekajam | BRP234.059.1

andhaṃ tama ivājñānaṃ dīpavac cendriyodbhavam | 59 || BRP234.059.2

— Brahmapurāṇa, Chapter 234: On suffering and final release from existence (absolute dissolution) (Chapter 234), Verse

1

GURU'S INTERPRETATION

The Brahmapurāṇa guides you, esteemed seekers, toward the ultimate goal – liberation, final release. The path to achieving this profound state, it tells us, is through both knowledge (jñāna) and action (karma). The passage emphasizes that knowledge itself is two-fold, stemming from sacred texts (āgama) and arising from discernment (viveka). The knowledge derived from scripture, the 'śabdabrahma,' is rooted in the revealed wisdom of the Vedas and other holy texts. This is the knowledge passed down through generations, guiding you on the correct rituals, conduct, and understanding of the divine.

But the Brahmapurāṇa doesn't stop there. It highlights the importance of knowledge born from your own discernment, 'vivekajam,' the understanding that dawns through contemplation and self-inquiry. While scriptural knowledge illuminates the path, it is your own discriminating wisdom that allows you to truly grasp the essence of reality, to differentiate between the transient and the eternal.

The scripture uses powerful metaphors to illustrate the nature of ignorance and true knowledge. Ignorance, 'ajñānaṃ,' is likened to blinding darkness, 'andhaṃ tama iva,' obscuring your vision and leading you astray. In contrast, knowledge gained through the senses, 'indriyodbhavam,' acts as a lamp, 'dīpavac,' shedding light on your path. This sensory-derived knowledge isn't purely empirical; it's about using your senses with awareness, observing the world with discernment, and drawing wisdom from your experiences.

In modern life, we are bombarded with information, often leading to confusion and a sense of being lost. This passage reminds you to seek knowledge from reliable sources, from the wisdom of tradition, but also to cultivate your own inner knowing. Engage in practices that sharpen your discernment – meditation, mindful observation, and honest self-reflection. Don't blindly accept everything you hear or read. Instead, use your intellect to analyze, question, and ultimately, to arrive at your own understanding of truth. Only then can you truly navigate the darkness of ignorance and find your way towards liberation.

REFLECTION FOR TODAY

How can you cultivate both scriptural knowledge and discerning wisdom in your daily life to illuminate your path?