— Brahmapurāṇa, Chapter 235: Description of the practice of Yoga (Chapter 235), Verse 1

GURU'S INTERPRETATION

The essence of yoga, as revealed here, centers on stilling the restless mind and merging it with the Supreme Self, the Paramatman. Imagine your mind as a restless bird, constantly flitting from one branch to another, drawn to the allure of worldly objects and desires. These verses tell us that true yogic accomplishment shines forth when this bird finally finds its resting place within the boundless expanse of the Paramatman, abandoning its pursuit of fleeting pleasures.

The Brahmapurāṇa emphasizes that the key is to relinquish attachment to the "viṣayāṃś," the sensory objects that typically captivate our attention. These are the sights, sounds, tastes, and sensations that constantly bombard us, pulling us away from our inner peace. When your mind becomes free from these distractions, when it is "nirviṣayaṃ," devoid of content and craving, it naturally dissolves into the Supreme Brahman. This state of absorption, of complete immersion, is the essence of Samadhi.

In this state of Samadhi, achieved through dedicated yogic practice, the yogi attains the supreme state, "param padam." This isn't a physical destination but a state of profound liberation, a realization of your true nature as one with the Divine. It's a transcendence of the limitations of the ego and the cycle of suffering.

How does this timeless wisdom apply to our modern lives, filled with distractions and demands? It reminds you that true happiness isn't found in external achievements or possessions, but in cultivating inner stillness. You can begin by consciously detaching from the constant stream of information and stimulation that surrounds you. Practice mindfulness, observe your thoughts and emotions without judgment, and gradually learn to quiet the inner chatter. Even a few moments of daily meditation can create space for the Paramatman to shine through, guiding you towards that supreme state of peace and fulfillment. The journey is not about suppressing your thoughts, but about recognizing their transient nature and anchoring yourself in the unchanging reality of your true Self.

REFLECTION FOR TODAY

If you were to relinquish one attachment today, what would it be, and how might that create space for a deeper connection with yourself?
