

MyGurukul

SACRED WISDOM — SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 2026

SACRED TEXT

dharmam dharmabhrtām śreṣṭhā munayaḥ satyadarśinaḥ | BRP238.034.1

ātmāno vyāpino viprā iti putrānuśāsanam || 34 || BRP238.034.2

prayatāya pravaktavyam hitāyānugatāya ca | BRP238.035.1

ātmajñānam idam guhyam sarvaguhyatamam mahat || 35 || BRP238.035.2

— Brahmapurāṇa, Chapter 238: On liberation by knowledge (Chapter 238), Verse 1

GURU'S INTERPRETATION

It speaks of dharma, not merely as ritualistic duty, but as the very essence that sustains all beings, a concept understood deeply by the wise sages, those who have realized the truth directly. The scripture emphasizes that the atman, your true self, is all-pervading, a divine spark present within everyone. This understanding, Brahmins would instruct their children, forms the foundation for a life of purpose and compassion.

The verses then introduce the concept of sacred knowledge, a hidden treasure to be shared with care. This knowledge of the self, this atmajñānam, is not for casual consumption; it's a profound secret, the most profound of all secrets. It should be imparted only to those who are earnest, who strive diligently, who are well-intentioned, and who are devoted followers of the path. This highlights the importance of preparation and receptivity in spiritual growth. It cautions against flippancy and encourages sincere seeking.

In our modern world, bombarded by information and distractions, these verses offer a powerful reminder. We are often encouraged to look outward for validation and fulfillment, chasing fleeting pleasures and external achievements. However, the Brahmapurāṇa gently guides us to turn inward, to recognize the boundless potential within ourselves. It suggests that true fulfillment lies not in acquiring things, but in realizing the inherent divinity that resides within each of us. The emphasis on sharing this knowledge with sincere seekers speaks to the importance of mentorship and spiritual community, a supportive network to guide you on your journey of self-discovery. Cultivating inner peace and understanding is a practice, a discipline to be carefully and thoughtfully undertaken. Recognize the divine within yourself and others.

REFLECTION FOR TODAY

How can you cultivate greater receptivity to the wisdom that already resides within you, and how can you share that light with others in a way that honors its sacredness?