

MyGurukul

SACRED WISDOM — SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 2026

SACRED TEXT

devau vā mānuṣau vāpi yakṣavidyādharaṁ yuvām | BRP050.058.1
kiṁ nu brahmahr̥ṣikeśau kiṁ vasū kim utāśvinau || 58 || BRP050.058.2
na vedmi satyasadbhāvau māyārūpeṇa saṁsthitau | BRP050.059.1
yuvām gato 'smi śaraṇam ātmā tu me prakāśyatām || 59 || BRP050.059.2

— Brahmapurāṇa, Chapter 50: Story of Indradyumna (cont.): Making of the images (Chapter 50), Verse 1

GURU'S INTERPRETATION

The verses from the Brahmapurāṇa capture a pivotal moment of profound spiritual uncertainty and desperate seeking. King Indradyumna, overwhelmed by the divine appearance of the carpenters (Vishwakarma and his assistant in disguise) tasked with crafting the images of Jagannatha, Balabhadra, and Subhadra, finds himself questioning their true nature. He cries out, unsure if they are gods, humans, yakshas, or vidyadharas. His confusion is compounded by the suspicion that they might even be Brahma, Hrishikesha (Vishnu), the Vasus, or the Ashvins.

Indradyumna's plea, "I do not know your truth, veiled as you are in Maya, I seek refuge in you, reveal your true Self to me," resonates deeply with the human condition. We often encounter situations and people whose true essence remains hidden, obscured by layers of illusion, Maya. Just as Indradyumna struggled to pierce through the disguise of the divine carpenters, you too may find yourself grappling with uncertainty, questioning the motivations and intentions of others.

This passage encourages you to cultivate discernment, to look beyond the surface appearances and seek the underlying truth. It reminds us that the world is often presented through a veil of Maya, making it challenging to distinguish between reality and illusion. Yet, Indradyumna's act of surrender holds the key. By acknowledging his ignorance and seeking refuge in the divine, he opens himself to receiving true knowledge. In your own life, embrace humility and recognize your limitations. When faced with uncertainty, turn inward, seek guidance from your higher self, and surrender to the wisdom of the universe. Like Indradyumna, ask for clarity and truth, trusting that the divine will ultimately reveal itself in its own time and way. This process of seeking truth is a constant and lifelong journey.

REFLECTION FOR TODAY

How can you cultivate greater discernment in your daily life to see beyond the illusions that obscure the truth?