— Tantravārttika, Chapter 1, Verse 1

GURU'S INTERPRETATION

The text emphasizes that all humans possess the potential and right to engage in practices that lead to spiritual growth and fulfillment. This is because the drive towards a desired outcome, coupled with the ability to act, is universally present within us.

When scripture instructs you to "do," it inherently acknowledges your agency, your capacity to embrace the action with a sense of "I will do." This isn't merely about the grammatical structure of commands; it's about recognizing the individual's inherent power to connect with the divine through action. The text points out that the essence of the injunction isn't just about the superficial form or the specific instance of the action. The verb itself, the command, isn't limited to a particular form or individual. Instead, it speaks to a universal potential within all beings.

Because the expressive power of language—particularly the verb—isn't confined to specific shapes or individuals, any action prescribed becomes relevant and beneficial to everyone. This is the astonishing truth that the Tantravārttika reveals: the path to spiritual awakening is open to all, regardless of their background. In today's world, this understanding is crucial. It challenges you to dismantle the artificial barriers that often restrict access to spiritual practices based on social standing, gender, or cultural origin. It encourages you to embrace a universal perspective, recognizing the inherent divinity within yourself and every other being. It's an invitation to participate fully in the unfolding of your own spiritual journey, knowing that the potential for transformation resides within you, waiting to be awakened through conscious action.
