GURU'S INTERPRETATION

Wisdom, the Mahabharata tells us, dawns when a person truly contemplates the scriptures. It's not just about reading the words, but about deeply reflecting upon their meaning and allowing them to shape your understanding of the world. When you are firmly rooted in the wisdom of the scriptures, dharma naturally follows, and modesty, hri, becomes your most precious ornament. This modesty isn't weakness, but a recognition of your place in the grand scheme, a humility that allows you to learn and grow.

A person possessing hri naturally despises sin, and as a consequence, prosperity and auspiciousness, shri, flourish in their life. This shri is not merely material wealth; it's the fullness of being, the richness of experience, the abundance of grace that comes from living in alignment with dharma. As long as this shri remains, the text says, so too does the complete person – whole, integrated, and fulfilled. It is this completeness that we all seek, a state of being where inner peace and outer harmony coincide.

The one steadfast in dharma is always of a peaceful nature, self-controlled, and ever-engaged in righteous action. Their mind is not drawn to unrighteousness, nor do they engage in sinful deeds. This doesn't mean you will never face temptations or make mistakes. It means your heart is oriented towards the good, and you strive to align your actions with your highest values.

In modern life, bombarded by distractions and temptations, this passage offers a profound guide. It reminds you to seek wisdom through sacred texts, cultivate modesty, shun negativity, and strive for righteous action. It's a call to live intentionally, to be mindful of your choices, and to constantly strive for inner peace and outer harmony. True success isn't just about achieving worldly goals; it's about cultivating inner qualities that lead to a life of purpose, fulfillment, and lasting happiness. The scriptures are not relics of the past, but living guides that can illuminate your path today.
