

MyGurukul

SACRED WISDOM — SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 2026

SACRED TEXT

yam tu karmaṇi yasmin sa nyayauṅkta prathamam prabhuḥ | 1.28a
sa tad eva svayam bheje sṛjyamānaḥ punaḥ punaḥ || 28 || 1.28c
hiṃsra.ahiṃsre mṛdu.krūre dharma.adharmāṇv ṛta.an.ṛte | 1.29a
yad yasya so 'dadhāt sarge tat tasya svayam āviśat | 29 || 1.29c

— Manusmṛti, 1.2. Creation (Chapter 2), Verse 1

GURU'S INTERPRETATION

The act of creation, as described here, speaks to the profound and intricate design woven into the fabric of existence. The verses explain that the Lord, at the beginning, assigned specific actions and qualities. Whatever task or attribute the Lord initially designated, that very essence was embraced by the created being, repeating and embodying it throughout subsequent creations. This concept emphasizes the inherent nature of things, their dharma, being pre-ordained and intrinsic.

Consider the pairs of opposites mentioned: violence and non-violence, gentleness and cruelty, righteousness and unrighteousness, truth and falsehood. These dualities are not random occurrences but divinely ordained aspects of the cosmic play. Each created being is imbued with a specific blend of these qualities, shaping its actions and experiences. What is assigned at the outset permeates its very being. This is not to say that creatures are without agency, but rather that their fundamental nature is predisposed towards certain expressions.

In your modern life, reflect on this. Consider the inherent tendencies you observe in yourself and others. Some are naturally inclined towards compassion, while others struggle with anger. Some readily embrace truth, while others are drawn to deception. Recognizing this pre-ordained element in human nature can foster greater understanding and acceptance. It allows you to see the world not as a chaotic accident but as a carefully orchestrated dance of opposing forces, each playing its vital role. It challenges you to act with compassion, knowing that not everyone has the same innate disposition.

Understanding this also encourages a deeper sense of self-awareness. Recognizing your own inherent tendencies, both positive and negative, allows you to work consciously with your own nature, cultivating the qualities you wish to strengthen and mitigating the impact of those you seek to diminish. It is a call to engage actively in your own spiritual evolution, rather than passively accepting your lot.

REFLECTION FOR TODAY

How can you use the understanding of inherent natures to cultivate greater compassion and understanding in your interactions with others, and how can this knowledge help you to more consciously shape your own character?