SACRED TEXT

*yuñjann evaṃ sadātmānaṃ yogī niyata-mānasaḥ |
śāntiṃ nirvāṇa-paramāṃ mat-saṃsthām adhigacchati || 15 ||*

— Bhagavadgītā-4comm with the commentaries of Śrīdhara, Madhusūdana, Viśvanātha and Baladeva, Chapter 1, Verse 15

GURU'S INTERPRETATION

The path to enduring peace, the kind that transcends all earthly disturbances, is unveiled in this verse. It speaks of the yogi, the dedicated seeker, who through consistent practice, unites their individual self, their atman, with the Divine. This isn't a fleeting connection, but a sustained and unwavering focus. The yogi, with disciplined mind, niyata-mānasaḥ, steadily cultivates this union, not just during formal meditation, but constantly. It is a state of being, a mindful presence woven into the fabric of daily life.

This verse underscores the importance of mental discipline. Our minds are often like restless monkeys, flitting from one thought to another, creating anxiety and scattering our energies. By training the mind through practices like meditation, mindfulness, or selfless service, you can gently guide it back to the present moment, to the awareness of your own inherent divinity. This disciplined focus, this yuñjann evaṃ sadātmānaṃ, is the key.

The ultimate reward of this dedication is śāntiṃ nirvāṇa-paramāṃ mat-saṃsthām adhigacchati: attaining supreme peace, the peace of nirvana, which rests in the Divine. This isn't just the absence of conflict, but a profound and unshakeable serenity that arises from recognizing your true nature as one with the source of all creation. It's a peace that persists even amidst chaos, a quiet strength born from inner alignment.

How can you apply this ancient wisdom to your modern life? Start small. Dedicate a few minutes each day to quiet contemplation. Practice mindful breathing during stressful moments. Engage in selfless acts of kindness. Each small step you take towards uniting your awareness with the Divine, towards disciplining your mind, brings you closer to experiencing that ultimate peace, that nirvana, that resides within you, waiting to be discovered. This journey is not about escaping the world, but about finding your center within it.
