— Bhagavadgītā-4comm with the commentaries of Śrīdhara, Madhusūdana, Viśvanātha and Baladeva, Chapter 1, Verses 5-1

GURU'S INTERPRETATION

The verses before us highlight a profound path to liberation, a journey accessible to all. It speaks of the realization of one's true nature, the sva-svarūpa-parijñānam, as the ultimate means to freedom, mukti-sāadhanam. This self-knowledge isn't some esoteric concept reserved for ascetics; rather, it's the inherent right and potential within each of you. It's the recognition of the divine spark, the Ātman, within.

The passage emphasizes that this realization isn't achieved through a single method, but through the dedicated practice of various spiritual disciplines, aneka-sāadhanābhyāsa. The wisdom, hariṇeritam, is bestowed by the divine, suggesting that grace plays a crucial role in your spiritual awakening. It's not solely about your effort, but also about opening yourself to divine guidance.

Further, the scripture clarifies that both the jñānī, the wise one who treads the path of knowledge, and the yogī, the one who practices disciplined action, niṣkāma-karmaṇā, can attain liberation. Niṣkāma-karma refers to selfless action, performed without attachment to results. It's about doing your duty with devotion and without clinging to the fruits of your labor.

In modern life, this translates to finding purpose in your work and relationships, not for personal gain or recognition, but for the sake of contributing to something larger than yourself. It means approaching your responsibilities with mindfulness and dedication, understanding that each action, performed with the right intention, is a step towards self-realization. The path to understanding the self, ātmā, and the supreme self, paramātmānāv, is the essence of this chapter. It requires consistent effort, unwavering faith, and a willingness to surrender to the divine will. By embracing selfless action and seeking knowledge, you can unlock your potential for inner peace and liberation.

REFLECTION FOR TODAY

In what area of your life can you practice more selfless action today, and how might that contribute to a deeper understanding of your true self?
