

MyGurukul

SACRED WISDOM — SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 2026

SACRED TEXT

*buddhi-yukto jahātīha ubhe sukr̥ta-duṣkr̥te |
tasmād yogāya yujyasva yogaḥ karmasu kauśalam ||50||*

— Bhagavadgītā-4comm with the commentaries of Śrīdhara, Madhusūdana, Viśvanātha and Baladeva, Chapter 1, Verse 50

GURU'S INTERPRETATION

When you are united with wisdom, with that inner knowing that transcends the duality of right and wrong, you release yourself from the bonds of both virtuous deeds (sukṛta) and sinful actions (duṣkr̥te) in this very life. It's not about abandoning action, but about acting from a place of inner stillness and clarity. Therefore, Krishna urges Arjuna, and by extension, you, to yoke yourself to yoga.

Yoga, in this context, isn't just physical postures; it's the art of skillful action – yogaḥ karmasu kauśalam. It's about performing your duties, whatever they may be, with awareness, detachment, and a sense of offering. When you act without attachment to the fruits of your labor, you are no longer bound by the karmic consequences. Your actions become a form of selfless service, a flow of energy that doesn't create new chains of attachment.

In modern life, this wisdom is incredibly relevant. We often get caught up in the pursuit of external validation and the fear of making mistakes. We constantly worry about whether our actions will lead to success or failure, praise or criticism. But if you cultivate inner wisdom and approach your work with a spirit of dedication and detachment, you can transcend this cycle of anxiety. Whether you're a parent, a professional, or a student, you can apply this principle by focusing on the present moment, doing your best, and letting go of the outcome.

It means acting not out of ego-driven ambition, but out of a sense of duty and love. It means finding joy in the process itself, rather than being solely fixated on the results. This doesn't mean you shouldn't strive for excellence; it simply means that your inner peace and sense of worth should not depend on external achievements. Embrace the journey, learn from your experiences, and trust that everything is unfolding as it should. Skill in action comes from this very state of being.

REFLECTION FOR TODAY

How can you bring more mindful awareness and detachment to your daily actions, transforming them into a form of yoga?