

MyGurukul

SACRED WISDOM — SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 2026

SACRED TEXT

jñājñau dvāv ajāv īsanīśāv ajā hy ekā bhoktr̥bhogārthayuktā // anantaś cātmā viśvarūpo hy akartā trayam yadā vindate brahmam etat kṣaram pradhānam amṛtākṣaram haraḥ kṣarātmānāv īśate deva ekaḥ // tasyābhidhyānād yojanāt tattvabhāvād bhūyaś cānte viśvamāyanivṛttiḥ

— Śvetāśvataropaniṣad, prathamo 'dhyāyaḥ (Chapter 1), Verses 9-10

GURU'S INTERPRETATION

We encounter two unborn entities: the knowing and the unknowing, the powerful and the powerless. The "unknowing" is further described as one, partaking in enjoyment and the objects of enjoyment, representing Prakriti, the primordial substance of nature, ever active and evolving. The knowing is the Atman, the individual soul, seemingly bound by Prakriti's dance.

However, the text immediately elevates this understanding. The Self is also infinite, the form of the universe, and ultimately, the non-doer. When you realize this unity – the Atman, Prakriti, and Brahman, the ultimate reality – you transcend the limitations of duality. This is the core of liberation.

The Upanishad then uses vivid imagery: Prakriti is perishable, while the Atman is imperishable. Hara, the Lord, the divine power, governs both the perishable and the imperishable. He is the one God, the ultimate reality that pervades everything. By meditating on Him, by uniting with Him through yoga, and by realizing the truth of your being, you can gradually dispel the illusion of the world, the Maya that keeps you bound.

This ancient wisdom is deeply relevant today. In your daily life, you often feel tossed between your desires and your higher self, between the demands of the world and your yearning for peace. This passage reminds you that this apparent duality is not the ultimate truth. Through self-reflection, meditation, and mindful living, you can recognize the divine presence within yourself and in all things. You are not merely a limited individual, but a part of the infinite, the universal Self. By consistently remembering this truth, you can gradually untangle yourself from the illusion of separation and experience the joy of unity.

REFLECTION FOR TODAY

How can you integrate the understanding of your infinite nature into your daily actions and interactions, seeing the divine in yourself and others?