SACRED TEXT

*bahuveṣadharmaścaiva dhyānayogaparāyaṇaḥ |
somavarṇa itī khyātaḥ koṭīśatavṛtaḥ prabhuḥ |
tādṛśānāṃ gaṇādhyakṣo devenāhūta āgataḥ || 26 ||*

— Skandapurāṇa, Chapter 23, Verse 26

GURU'S INTERPRETATION

This verse from the Skandapurāṇa paints a vivid picture of a powerful being, one who embodies multifaceted wisdom and profound meditative absorption. We see a deity described as "bahuveṣadharmaḥ," one who assumes many forms, suggesting the boundless nature of divine expression. This isn't a rigid, fixed entity, but rather a dynamic force capable of manifesting in countless ways to meet the needs of the moment, much like how you adapt your own behavior depending on the situation. The passage emphasizes his devotion to "dhyānayogaparāyaṇaḥ," indicating a profound commitment to meditation and union, a path that leads to self-realization and connection with the divine source.

Furthermore, this luminous being is known as "somavarṇa," having the complexion of Soma, often associated with the moon, representing tranquility, peace, and the nectar of immortality. This association suggests the deity's ability to bestow serenity and life-giving energy upon devotees. He is surrounded by "koṭīśatavṛtaḥ prabhuḥ," countless crores of beings, signifying his immense power and influence, and also the vastness of the spiritual realm he presides over. The verse concludes by stating that this "gaṇādhyakṣa," a leader of celestial attendants, is summoned by another deva, highlighting the hierarchical yet interconnected nature of the divine cosmos.

How can you apply this ancient wisdom in your own life? Recognize that you, too, possess the capacity to wear many hats, to adapt and express different facets of your being depending on what's required. Embrace meditation and introspection as a means to cultivate inner peace and connect with your own divine essence. Remember that even in moments of feeling small or insignificant, you are surrounded by unseen support, by the potential for infinite growth and transformation. Just as the deity is summoned, you too can call upon higher powers for guidance and assistance.

REFLECTION FOR TODAY

What "forms" are you being called to embody in this season of your life, and how can you cultivate the inner stillness needed to navigate these roles with grace?
