

MyGurukul

SACRED WISDOM — SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 2026

SACRED TEXT

*bhagavandevadeveśa yaccha yanme manogatam |
ato 'haṃ nānyadicchāmi yogākṣayyātparaṃ hitam || 121 ||
tvayi bhaktiśca nityaṃ syātsome sagaṇapeśvare |
anutsekaṃ tathā kṣāntiṃ śamaṃ damamathāpi ca || 122 ||*

— Skandapurāṇa, Chapter 29, Verses 121-122

GURU'S INTERPRETATION

The essence of their prayer is simple yet profound: "Grant me that which resides within my heart. Beyond imperishable Yoga, I desire nothing else." This yearning transcends material desires, focusing instead on the ultimate union with the divine. It speaks to a deep understanding that true happiness isn't found in external possessions or achievements, but in the unwavering connection with the source of all creation. The devotee isn't asking for miracles or boons, but for the grace to realize their inherent divinity through Yoga, which in this context represents the path of self-realization and union with the Supreme.

The subsequent verse elaborates on the qualities necessary for this divine union. The devotee seeks unwavering devotion to Shiva, accompanied by his Ganas and Parvati, emphasizing the importance of a steadfast and complete surrender to the divine. Furthermore, the prayer includes a plea for humility (anutseka), forgiveness (ksanti), inner peace (shama), and self-control (dama). These virtues are not merely moral imperatives, but essential tools for dismantling the ego and clearing the path for spiritual growth. They are the inner landscape upon which the divine seed of Yoga can blossom. Think of these qualities as the fertile ground needed to nurture the seed of devotion.

In our modern lives, bombarded by distractions and driven by ambition, these verses offer a powerful counterpoint. We often chase external validation and material success, neglecting the inner work necessary for true fulfillment. The devotee's prayer reminds you to look within, to cultivate humility, forgiveness, peace, and self-control. These are not weaknesses, but strengths that allow you to navigate the challenges of life with grace and wisdom. By prioritizing these qualities and cultivating devotion, you can experience a deeper connection with yourself, with others, and with the divine source that permeates all existence. By focusing on internal growth rather than external achievements, you can discover a lasting sense of peace and purpose.

REFLECTION FOR TODAY

What one small act of humility or self-control can you practice today to foster a deeper connection with your inner self and the divine?