

MyGurukul

SACRED WISDOM — SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 2026

SACRED TEXT

*avyaktaliṅginaścaiva śivayogojjvalaprabhāḥ |
bahavaḥ śataśo 'bhyetya namaścakrurmaheśvaram || 63 ||
punarnirīkṣya deveśaṃ dhyānayogaṃ ca kṛtsnaśaḥ |
tasthurātmānamādhāya līyamānā iveśvare || 64 ||*

— Skandapurāṇa, Chapter 29, Verses 63-64

GURU'S INTERPRETATION

This passage from the Skandapurāṇa paints a vivid picture of spiritual devotion and ultimate union. We see countless devotees, described as "avyaktaliṅginaḥ," meaning those whose lingas (symbols of Shiva) are unmanifest, or perhaps inwardly realized. They are further characterized by the radiant light emanating from their practice of Shiva Yoga – a testament to the transformative power of their devotion. These individuals, hundreds upon hundreds, approach Maheśvara, the Great Lord, and offer their respectful obeisances.

Consider what this means for you. The "avyaktaliṅginaḥ" suggests that true devotion isn't always about outward displays or rituals, but about the internal connection you forge with the divine. The "śivayogojjvalaprabhāḥ," the radiant light of Shiva Yoga, speaks to the tangible benefits of spiritual practice. When you dedicate yourself to connecting with your inner self, with the divine spark within, you too can experience a palpable shift in your being, a radiance that shines from within.

The next verse deepens this understanding. After paying homage, these devotees gaze upon the Lord of Gods, fully absorbing the essence of meditation and yoga. They then "tasthurātmānamādhāya līyamānā iveśvare," they remain, placing their very selves, their individual identities, into Īśvara, appearing to merge into the Lord. This speaks to the ultimate goal of spiritual practice: the dissolution of the ego, the merging of the individual soul with the universal consciousness. Imagine releasing your attachments, your anxieties, your sense of separateness, and allowing yourself to be absorbed into the boundless love and wisdom of the divine.

How can you apply this wisdom to your modern life? It's about finding moments of stillness, even amidst the chaos. It's about dedicating time to practices that cultivate inner peace and self-awareness, whether it's meditation, yoga, or simply spending time in nature. It's about recognizing the divine spark within yourself and within everyone you encounter. By striving to live with intention and compassion, you can gradually shed the limitations of your ego and move closer to that state of blissful union described in the Skandapurāṇa. The path may be long, but the destination is worth every step.

REFLECTION FOR TODAY

What small, intentional act can you incorporate into your day to cultivate a deeper sense of connection with the divine within you and the world around you?