

MyGurukul

SACRED WISDOM — SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 2026

SACRED TEXT

*tadeṣopaniṣatproktā mayā vyāsa sanātanā |
yām śrutvā yogino dhyānātprapadyante maheśvaram || 8 ||
brahmaṃ ca yo vidadhe putramagre jñānaṃ ca yaḥ prahiṇoti sma tasmai |
tamātmasthaṃ ye 'nupaśyanti dhīrāsteṣāṃ śāntiḥ śāśvatī netareṣāṃ || 9 ||
sa vyāsa pitaraṃ dr̥ṣṭvā svadīptyā parayā yutam |
putrakāmaḥ prajāhetostapastīvraṃ cakāra ha || 10 ||*

— Skandapurāṇa, Chapter 3, Verses 8-10

GURU'S INTERPRETATION

This isn't just any story; it's a profound teaching. He emphasizes that by truly hearing and absorbing this wisdom, yogis, through deep meditation, can attain union with Maheshvara, the Supreme Lord. It speaks to the transformative power of focused attention and spiritual listening.

The verses then describe the one who created Brahma and bestowed knowledge upon him. It highlights the inner essence, the Atman, residing within each of us. Those who, with steadfast wisdom, perceive this inner Self attain eternal peace, a state unavailable to those who remain caught in the external world. This peace isn't a fleeting emotion, but a lasting state of being rooted in self-realization. It speaks to the importance of turning your gaze inward, seeking the source of creation within your own heart.

Finally, we learn of Vyasa's own father, seen radiant with divine light. Driven by the desire for offspring, he undertook intense austerities. This part of the passage underscores the power of intention and the transformative effect of disciplined practice. His longing for progeny represents a deeper yearning – a desire to perpetuate the lineage of wisdom and spiritual understanding.

In today's world, where distractions abound and inner peace feels elusive, these verses offer a powerful reminder. They encourage you to cultivate inner stillness through practices like meditation and mindful awareness. By turning inward, you can access the wisdom that resides within, connect with your true Self, and ultimately find lasting peace. The pursuit of worldly desires often leaves us empty, but the journey inward leads to fulfillment and a deeper understanding of our place in the cosmos.

REFLECTION FOR TODAY

How can you create dedicated space in your daily life to cultivate the inner stillness necessary to perceive the divine light within?