

MyGurukul

SACRED WISDOM — SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 2026

SACRED TEXT

*ayaṃ te janakaḥ putra suśarmā lokaviśrutaḥ |
kathayiṣyati tattvena yattvayā samudāhṛtam || 2 ||
tataḥ suśarmā viprarṣe tamāmantrya mahāmanāḥ |
uvācedaṃ mahāsattvaṃ sukeśaṃ gaṇasattamam || 3 ||
gaṇeśvareśa śṛṇuyā narakā ye prakīrtitāḥ |
durāsadā mahādurgāḥ sarvaprāṇibhayaṃkarāḥ || 4 ||*

— Skandapurāṇa, Chapter 37, Verses 2-4

GURU'S INTERPRETATION

We find ourselves amidst a lineage of wisdom, where Suśarmā, famed throughout the realms, is introduced as the father, ready to elucidate the truths sought by his son. He will clarify the questions that the son has put forth. This act itself speaks volumes about the importance of lineage, not merely in blood, but in the transmission of spiritual knowledge.

Suśarmā, a noble soul, then addresses the great and powerful Sukeśa, chief of the Ganas, a being of immense spiritual stature. He prepares to impart knowledge concerning the hells, those formidable and perilous realms that inspire fear in all beings. This isn't merely a geographical description of infernal regions; rather, it symbolizes the states of suffering and ignorance that can be experienced within your own consciousness. These "hells" represent the consequences of negative actions, the internal turmoil born from attachment, aversion, and delusion.

The Skandapurāṇa, through this dialogue, urges you to confront your own inner darkness. It reminds you that the "hells" are not merely external threats but internal realities that you can either succumb to or transcend. Understanding the nature of these suffering states is the first step towards liberation. Just as Sukeśa, the chief of the Ganas, is called upon to listen, you too are invited to pay attention, to become aware of the potential pitfalls that lie on your spiritual path. Recognizing these pitfalls allows you to cultivate virtues such as compassion, wisdom, and detachment, thereby paving the way for a more fulfilling and enlightened life. In modern life, these hells manifest as stress, anxiety, and the pursuit of fleeting pleasures. By understanding the roots of these sufferings, you can begin to dismantle them, creating a more peaceful and harmonious existence.

REFLECTION FOR TODAY

Are you willing to explore the darker corners of your own consciousness to find the light of understanding and compassion?