

MyGurukul

SACRED WISDOM — SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 2026

SACRED TEXT

*sadaiva vidhinānena deveśasya prabhor ahaṃ |
bhaveyaṃ bhāvataḥ pūjākārakaś ceti cintayet ||44||
svahaṃsam atarātmānaṃ cidrūpaṃ paramātmāni | [antarātmānaṃ ?]
yojayet parame haṃse nīrvāṇapadam aśnute ||45||
dvābhyāṃ ekaṃ vidhāyātha śubhadhyānena yogavit |
paramātmavarūpaṃ taṃ svam ātmā cainaṃ vicintayet ||43||*

— Yogapradīpa, Chapter 1, Verses 44-43

GURU'S INTERPRETATION

These verses from the Yogapradīpa offer a profound pathway to union and liberation, urging you to cultivate devotion and merge your individual consciousness with the divine. Verse 44 emphasizes constant, mindful worship. It's not merely about ritual, but about continuously contemplating your role as a devotee of the supreme being, the "deveśa" or "prabhu." You are encouraged to see yourself as an instrument of divine will, constantly offering your actions and thoughts as a form of worship. This continuous devotion transforms your daily life into a sacred act.

Verse 45 delves deeper, guiding you to unite your "svahaṃsa" – your individual soul or "antarātmānaṃ" – with the "paramātmānaṃ," the supreme soul. The term "cidrūpaṃ" indicates the conscious nature of the soul. Imagine your individual consciousness as a drop of water merging back into the vast ocean of divine consciousness. This union, achieved through recognizing the inherent connection between your soul and the divine, leads to "nīrvāṇapadam," the state of liberation and ultimate peace. It's about transcending the limitations of your ego and realizing your true, infinite nature.

Verse 43 builds upon this, advising the yogi to bring together two aspects into one through auspicious meditation. The "yogavit," or knower of yoga, unites the individual soul ("svam ātmā") with the supreme soul ("paramātmavarūpaṃ"). This union is visualized and contemplated, allowing you to experience the interconnectedness of all things. In modern life, this translates to recognizing the divine spark within yourself and in everyone around you. It means approaching your relationships, work, and daily activities with a sense of sacredness and interconnectedness. By cultivating devotion, recognizing your true nature, and contemplating the union of individual and supreme consciousness, you can unlock the path to liberation and find lasting peace.

REFLECTION FOR TODAY

How can you consciously integrate the concept of offering your actions as worship into your daily routine to deepen your connection with the divine?