SACRED TEXT

*taddharmataddharmas tadvrataṃ dhyānaṃ tat ta yo yoga eva saḥ | [tat tat ?]
sa eva hi padāroho na yatra kliśyate manaḥ || 52 ||*

— Yogapradīpa, Chapter 1, Verse 52

GURU'S INTERPRETATION

That essence, that very nature, that sacred vow, that profound meditation - all these, indeed, constitute Yoga. It is truly that ascent, that climbing of the ladder of consciousness, where the mind finds itself free from suffering. This verse from the Yogapradīpa speaks to the heart of what yoga truly is: not just a series of postures, but a complete immersion in the divine. It reveals that yoga is not merely an external practice, but an internal transformation.

The phrase "taddharmataddharmas" points to aligning yourself with the inherent dharma, the truth, of the Self and the universe. It's about recognizing the interconnectedness of all things and living in harmony with that truth. The "tadvratam," the sacred vow, signifies your commitment to this path, your dedication to living a life of purpose and meaning. This vow isn't a rigid promise, but a gentle intention that guides your actions and choices.

The "dhyanam," or meditation, is the tool that allows you to access this inner peace. It's through consistent and focused meditation that you can quiet the incessant chatter of the mind and connect with the stillness within. This stillness, the verse suggests, is the key to liberation. It is in this space of quietude that you can begin to climb the "padāroho," the ladder of consciousness, and ascend to a higher state of awareness.

The most beautiful part of this verse is its promise: "na yatra kliśyate manaḥ," where the mind is no longer afflicted. This is the ultimate goal of yoga, to transcend suffering and find lasting peace. In our modern lives, filled with distractions and anxieties, this promise is more relevant than ever. By embracing the principles of yoga, by aligning ourselves with our dharma, by committing to our sacred vow, and by practicing meditation, we can begin to climb our own ladder of consciousness and experience the freedom from suffering that the Yogapradīpa speaks of. Yoga becomes not just something we do, but something we are, a state of being where peace resides.

REFLECTION FOR TODAY

Are you willing to embrace the transformative power of yoga beyond the physical postures, to truly embody its essence in your daily life and climb your own ladder of consciousness?
