— Yogapradīpa, Chapter 1, Verses 58-60

GURU'S INTERPRETATION

These verses from the Yogapradīpa illuminate the path to liberation, urging you to release the illusions of worldly existence. Verse 58 speaks of abandoning the delusion of worldly life, leading to a state of pure bliss, the very essence of your true self. This natural state of being, Sahaja, is the very path to liberation, moksha, for the dedicated spiritual aspirant. It's about recognizing that the anxieties and fleeting pleasures of the world are not the ultimate reality.

Verses 59 and 60 delve into the qualities of this liberated state. Imagine a mind free from the constraints of the body, untouched by the breath, transcending the cycle of coming and going, and devoid of all activity. This is not annihilation, but a profound stillness, a spaciousness where the true self can be realized. It's a state beyond dependence, requiring no support, yet paradoxically, supporting all. This supreme awakening, a great arising, is the ultimate refuge. Yogis understand this pure, untainted state as the 'parācīnaṁ padaṁ', a term that suggests a state beyond the reach of the senses, turned inward, towards the ultimate reality.

How does this apply to your life today? It's easy to get caught up in the daily grind, the constant demands of work, family, and societal expectations. These verses remind you to step back, to cultivate moments of stillness amidst the chaos. Practicing mindfulness, meditation, or simply taking a few deep breaths throughout the day can help you quiet the mind and connect with that inner source of peace and stability. By detaching from the constant stream of thoughts and emotions, you can begin to glimpse the true nature of your being, the ānandaikarasātmikā, the state of pure bliss that resides within. This isn't about escaping life, but about engaging with it from a place of inner strength and wisdom. It's about finding your center, your still point, in the midst of the turning world.

REFLECTION FOR TODAY

Can you identify one illusion or attachment that you can begin to release today to move closer to your natural state of being?
