

MyGurukul

SACRED WISDOM — SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 2026

SACRED TEXT

*taśyāmāpi kadā yena kāyadurgasamāśritaḥ | [tan nāmāpi?]
ajñānachāditaḥ svātmā nirīkṣyo yogibhiḥ sadā || 7 |
ātmaiva suprasannotra sugatiḥ parikīrtatā |
aprasannaḥ punar ayaṁ durgatiḥ syād asaṁśayam || 8 |*

— Yogapradīpa, Chapter 1, Verses 7-8

GURU'S INTERPRETATION

Within this context, Yogapradīpa unveils a profound truth: even in the midst of physical existence, within what it calls the "fortress of the body," lies the potential for spiritual blindness. Ignorance, like a thick veil, obscures the true Self. Yogis, those dedicated seekers, are called to tirelessly look inward, to pierce through this veil and reveal the radiant Atman, the essence of your being. This isn't a casual glance, but a sustained, diligent inquiry into the nature of who you truly are, beyond the limitations of your physical form and mental constructs.

The scripture then draws a stark contrast, revealing the consequences of this inner vision. When the Atman, your true Self, is delighted, clear, and content, that very state is liberation, the ultimate good. It's described as "suprasanotra sugatiḥ parikīrtatā," meaning a state of supreme joy and auspicious destiny. Conversely, when the Atman is clouded, unhappy, and agitated – "aprasannaḥ punar ayaṁ durgatiḥ syād asaṁśayam" – without a doubt, it leads to suffering and a less favorable destiny.

This speaks directly to your daily life. Your internal state is not merely a feeling; it is a compass guiding your journey. When you cultivate inner peace through practices like yoga, meditation, and mindful living, you are nurturing the contentment of your Atman, paving the way for positive experiences and a sense of fulfillment. Conversely, when you succumb to negativity, stress, and unwholesome habits, you obscure the Atman, leading to dissatisfaction and hardship. The choice, as always, lies within you. Your happiness, your peace, your liberation, all depend on your ability to look within and cultivate a joyful, clear, and content Atman.

REFLECTION FOR TODAY

Are you truly content, or is your inner joy being clouded by the worries of everyday life, and what small step can you take today to nurture your Atman, your inner self?