SACRED TEXT

*somasūryadvayātītaṃ vāyusaṃcāravarjitaṃ |
saṅkalpavarjitaṃ cittaṃ parabrahmani gadyate ||70||*

— Yogapradīpa, Chapter 1, Verse 70

GURU'S INTERPRETATION

This verse from the Yogapradīpa unveils a profound state of consciousness, a destination towards which your yogic practice is ultimately directed. It speaks of a mind that has transcended duality, represented here by the sun and moon – symbols of the active and receptive, the masculine and feminine, the hot and cold aspects of our being. To move beyond these dualities means to achieve a state of equanimity, where you are no longer swayed by the constant push and pull of opposing forces.

The verse further describes this elevated state as being "free from the movement of vāyu," or vital air. This isn't just about controlling your breath, but about calming the restless energy that fuels your thoughts and emotions. When the prana, the life force, flows smoothly and evenly, it doesn't agitate the mind. It allows a stillness to permeate your entire being.

Perhaps most importantly, this verse tells you that this state is "free from saṅkalpa," or intention and volition. This does not mean becoming passive or devoid of purpose. Rather, it suggests releasing the incessant mental chatter of planning, worrying, and striving. It is about surrendering to the present moment, trusting the flow of life, and letting go of the need to control every outcome. When your mind is free from the constant pursuit of desires and the avoidance of fears, it rests naturally in its true nature, which is described here as Parabrahman, the Supreme Reality.

In modern life, this wisdom can seem daunting. You are bombarded with information, expectations, and demands. Yet, the Yogapradīpa offers a path. Through consistent practice of yoga, meditation, and self-awareness, you can cultivate the ability to detach from the relentless demands of your mind. You can learn to observe your thoughts and emotions without being swept away by them. You can create moments of stillness amidst the chaos, and in those moments, glimpse the peace that lies within. This verse reminds you that the ultimate goal of yoga is not just physical flexibility or mental clarity, but a profound union with the divine, a state of being where the mind dissolves into the vastness of Parabrahman.

REFLECTION FOR TODAY

What small step can you take today to quiet the internal chatter and experience a moment of stillness, even amidst the busyness of your life?
